The American shipyard Hunt Yachts has released an update in regards to their latest superyacht project, the Hunt 80 semi-custom. Now nearing completion, she is in her final assembly stages. In the following pictures from the shipyard, you can now see that the flybridge and custom sundeck is in place, revealing the vessels final profile.

The hull and deck are faired for gel coating and painting, and the frameless windows will be installed throughout the semi-custom yacht to maintain the clean profile. Once the fairing is complete, the yacht will be ready to paint.

The Hunt 80 boasts a three-stateroom layout with a deluxe full-beam master suite amidships. The main deck encompasses a large galley, dining area, and main salon opening onto an open-air aft deck sheltered by the flybridge overhang. Like all Hunt yachts, the Hunt 80 features a hull and superstructure designed by C. Raymond Hunt Associates.

The yard reports that she is on target for a May completion, in which she will then undergo sea trials in Rhode Island in June.
